There's an inverse relationship between having more and needing less that dictates the quality of life a person can experience. For example, if all other variables remain static, and all of a sudden you have more of something - let's say money for example - then you're better off, right? And conversely, if all other variables remain static, and all of a sudden you need less money, then you're also better off. So assuming you want to be better off, it's a good objective to either increase your financial wealth, or decrease your dependency on money. But let's take this one step further... Are these two concepts truly equal? Financially speaking, the answer would be "yes." But in terms of gaining happiness, the answer is a loud and resounding "NO!" Time and time again, we see people join the "rat race" and work to the bone for more money, and once they get it: firstly, it's never enough and they always want more, and secondly, it becomes a full time job just to protect what they've managed to accumulate. Happiness is never achieved this way, and that's a guarantee! So what's a much simpler, better way that can actually lead to true and lasting happiness? That's right, needing less! In this book, I have included everything you need to know about living on less money and adopting a minimalist mentality. So if you're ready to reduce your dependency on money, then grab this book now and let's get started!

Living Without the Screen provides an in-depth study of those American families and individuals who opt not to watch television, exploring the reasons behind their choices, discussing their beliefs about television, and examining the current role of television in the American family. Author Marina Krcmar answers several questions in the volume: What is television? Who are those people who reject it? What are their reasons for doing so? How do they believe their lives are different because of this choice? What impact does this choice have on media research? This volume provides a current, distinctive, and important look at how personal choices on media use are made, and how these choices reflect more broadly on media's place in today's society. A compelling exploration of the motivations and rationales for those who choose to live without television, this book is a must-read for scholars and researchers working in children and media, media literacy, sociology, family studies and related areas. It will also be of interest to anyone with questions about media usage and the choices families make regarding the role of media in their lives.
